

FLORENCE, ITALY 1230 and 1595

The miracle of 1230

Father Ugucione, as he finished Mass, by mistake left some drops of the consecrated wine in the chalice. The following day, when he returned to celebrate Mass, he found in the chalice some drops of living blood, which had coagulated and turned into flesh-color.

The miracle of 1595

On Good Friday, by accident, a candle was left lit on the altar of the side Chapel of the Holy Sepulchre, causing a raging fire. The people ran at once to put out the fire and managed to salvage the Eucharist and the chalice. In the general confusion, six consecrated Hosts fell onto the flaming carpet, and yet despite the fire, the Hosts were recovered intact.

The relics of two miracles are preserved in the church of St. Ambrose in Florence. Each year the relics are exposed together for public adoration.
